Terrorized by Black Hand.

Government secret service detectives are on the track of the Black Hand Society of Richmond, whose alleged members have terrorized the homes of prominent Italian citizens in that city. It is said this society has succeeded by threats of assassination in extorting at least $1,500 out of Italians in Lynchburg and other Virginia cities.

The refusal of Joseph Marsala, a well-known Italian merchant of Richmond, to give up $500 under threat of assassination is only one of several such cases brought to light. The publicity he gave to the threatening communications he received emboldened others of his country nen whose lives had been threatened to angel and to speak out.

Louis Correiri, liquor dealer in west Broad street, was ordered to leave $1,fair grounds and death was named as the penalty of failure to comply. He was warned not to communicate with the police, and was told in the message that if he did so he would be shot down in the street. A stiletto stuck on the door bore the family would be wiped out and his house burned because of this bad treatment of his countrymen. Becoming oroughly alarmed. Correiri, submitted the message and his fears to some of his Washington, and this was done. The communications were all written in Italian and bear the signature Garibaldi.

"All this day you are marked by the society and it will attend to you unless you treat your own nationality better.
